Synopsis

‘Ramchand Pakistani’ is derived from a true story concerning the accidental crossing of the Pakistan-Indian border during a period (June 2002) of extreme, war-like tension between the two countries by two members of a Pakistani Hindu family belonging to the 'untouchable' (Dalit) caste, and the extraordinary consequences of this unintended action upon the lives of a woman, a man, and their son.

The singular theme of the film is how a child from Pakistan aged eight years learns to cope with the trauma of forced separation from his mother while being held prisoner, along with his father in the jail of a country i.e. India, which is hostile to his own, while on the other side of the border, the wife-mother, devastated by their sudden disappearance builds a new chapter of her life, by her solitary struggle for sheer survival.

Belonging to one of the lowest castes in Hinduism (one of the “untouchables”), the family is also part of a small minority of Hindus in a country, which is the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, in which 97% of the people are Muslims. The boy and his father are held captive in India where, in contrast to Pakistan, the overwhelming majority of about 80% comprises of Hindus.

The film portrays the lives of a family that is at the bottom of a discriminatory religious ladder and an insensitive social system, which is nevertheless tolerant, inclusive and pluralist. The irony is compounded by the fact that such a family becomes hostage to the acrimonious political relationship between two neighbor-states poised on the brink of war.

"I loved the film. Beautifully made. Great authenticity. Nandita was strong and moving".

Mira Nair

“Another example of film bringing together cross-border talent is the upcoming "Ramchand Pakistani," directed by New York- and Karachi-based director Mehreen Jabbar, a daughter of Pakistan's former Information Minister Javed Jabbar."

"Two new films shed light on Pakistan's deep-rooted social and political problems by looking at them through the eyes of a child. "Ramchand Pakistani" follows the young Hindu boy of the title as he accidentally steps over the ill-defined border between old rivals Pakistan and India."

Reuters, February 19, 2008.
One of the reasons I always knew I would be a director was that it was the only way I could communicate well. I was reticent growing up and felt that telling a story in pictures would be the way I would be part of the world.

It has been an exciting journey to make this film, a combination of the unexpected and the inevitable. I remember early 2006, I was returning to Pakistan from the USA after a gap of more than 2 years and my father, Javed Jabbar, had written to me saying he had a great idea for a feature. I didn't give it too much thought, because the reality of making a film seemed elusive at the time despite the fact that I had been directing and producing TV films and serials for Pakistani Television channels for 13 years. However, directing a feature film had always been my dream.

My father welcomed me back to Pakistan with a four-page synopsis he had written about the story based on a real life incident about a Pakistani Hindu father and son belonging to the ‘untouchable’ (Dalit) caste who had spent some years in an Indian jail. I was riveted from the minute I started reading it.

So what drew me to this story? For one, it was the simplicity of it: a family separated for no fault of their own and forcibly put into a situation where they have to deal with circumstances not of their making. With this simple story came layers upon layers of subtext – about relationships, discrimination and the politics of the region – told not in a propagandist way but rather through the eyes of a child and a woman.

Another, is that I have always wanted to work with children because of the rawness and intelligence a good child actor can deliver. A lot of it has to do with being greatly moved and inspired by Iranian cinema and Mira Nair's ‘Salaam Bombay’!

Finally, it was the challenge of shooting in Pakistan's Thar Desert – an arid, underdeveloped region where the harshness of the conditions go hand in hand with the sheer magnificent beauty of the area and the resilience and strength of the people who live there.

The story of the film rings true even today when hundreds of prisoners of either country languish in the jails of the other. The vast majority are victims of accidental and inadvertent border crossings and they end up forgotten and lost in the labyrinth of bureaucracy and red-tapism and subject to the vagaries of Pakistan-India relations.
PRE – PRODUCTION

The challenges in getting this film made were several: the declining state of Pakistan’s film industry and the resulting poor technical facilities; cinemas being broken down to make way for shopping centres; and finding investors interested in a project unlike the typically formulaic song-and-dance film. In that regard, my father, who wrote the first draft of the story and produced the film, was instrumental in approaching friends and colleagues from diverse sectors to invite them to join our family in investing in the project. I am deeply grateful to all of them for their vision and belief in the film.

The next task ahead was to get together the production team. We knew from the start that whoever would come on board would do it as a labour of love, because we felt we were making something different and trying something that hadn’t been tried before. Most of the team from Pakistan had no experience in film. Many came from a television background. It was important from the start for me to work with people who I am the most comfortable with and who are on the same wave-length, so I approached my friend Sofian Khan who had collaborated with me on projects in New York to be the cinematographer for the film. He was also given the task of assembling a talented crew from NY who would be willing to travel to Pakistan and enjoy the thrill of the desert while having stomachs of steel! And so Nina Kuhn (Head Gaffer), Jesse Mailings (Sound Recordist) and Josef Shafer (HD Technician) headed into unknown territory with great spirits and a love of adventure.

My long time associate, screenplay writer Mohammad Ahmed who has written some deeply insightful and moving scripts for TV dramas and serials was imprisoned for around 8 months in our office in Karachi where the screenplay slowly took shape, while the two leading women of our crew, Mariam Mukaty, the Associate Producer and Sonia Rehman, the Creative Consultant kept the production and creative sides on track and spirits high, headed of course by my father with his indomitable spirit and positive energy permeating through the team.

CASTING:

It was imperative we find the right face for Ramchand. The film depended on it. After auditioning many school children as well as boys from the Thar Desert region, a fellow director friend of mine suggested a boy called Fazal Hussain who had worked in his TV film when he was 5 years old. The boy, now 7.5, but going on 40, met us and the minute I turned on the camcorder for the audition, I knew we had found him.

And then we had to find an older Ramchand! Here, a lot of effort mixed with sheer luck helped us along the way and we discovered Navaid, a student of grade 6 who worked part time as a mechanic at his father’s shop in Mirpurkhas, a small town about 4 hours from Karachi. Even though he came from a different background than his younger counterpart he shared his sensitivity and his excitement.
Nandita Das and I had been friends since 2001 when she visited Pakistan for the first KaraFilm Festival that some friends and I had put together and since then we had been talking about working together. I have always admired the ease with which she becomes a character and the authenticity she brings to it.

Rashid Farooqi who plays the father has always been a favourite of mine and we've worked on many projects together, while Maria Wasti and Noman Ijaz are very well respected television actors of Pakistan. Every single member of the cast, a hugely talented pool of TV and stage actors, both established and amateurs contributed with great integrity and hard work to the entire process from rehearsal to the sometimes grueling shooting timelines.

COLLABORATION:

This film has been an incredible journey in collaboration, between people as well as countries -- Pakistan, India and the US. The music team comprises of the driven and passionate Debajyoti Mishra from India whose music for the film, ‘Raincoat’ convinced me that this is the person I want to work with. Shuhba Mudgal from India with her soaring earthy voice joined by Shafqat Amanat Ali of Pakistan who is one of our most distinctive male singers lent their voices to 4 powerful and evocative songs written by the celebrated media personality, painter and writer of Pakistan, Anwar Maqsood.

Recording the background music in Mumbai and navigating Mumbai’s incredible traffic every day and night for about 3 weeks proved to be an experience in itself while through the valued help of the great film-maker, Shyam Benegal, we were introduced to his long time associate, Aseem Sinha with whom I co-edited the final version of the film to its 105-minutes.

Having visited, for research purposes, the main jail in the town of Bhuj in the Indian State of Gujrat close to which the original protagonists were held prisoners, the Producer and I were able to guide the production designer, Aqeel ur Rehman in Karachi to re-create on the outskirts of the city a large Indian jail which saw hectic work for over 3 weeks. It was also the only location in Pakistan other than the Indian High Commission in Islamabad, where the Indian flag flew at full mast for about 3 to 4 weeks!

As an apt culmination of the international collaborative facets of what remains essentially a Pakistani film, the final post-production phase was conducted in New York over a period of about 5 weeks.

To then hold the complete version of the film in the form of a DVD in the palms of my hands continues to fascinate me as to how all the diverse, prolonged and complex streams of in-puts for over 2 years become compressed into a small disk: a gentle reminder to ensure humility.
RAMCHAND PAKISTANI

Special aspects of the film

1. This is possibly the first film in the 60-year history of Pakistan, and most certainly the first film post-1971 (after the loss of East Pakistan) in which the central characters of a Pakistani film are Pakistani Hindus.

2. In a country where 97% of the people are Muslims, Hindus constitute only about 1.5% of the non-Muslim population.

3. The film is a human interest story set in South Asia but with universal appeal about a family that is at the bottom of social, religious and economic hierarchies, both by virtue of being non-Muslims in a pre-dominantly Muslim society, and by being from the “untouchable” Dalit (Kohli) caste in the Hindu faith.

Yet, the film’s theme and story promote secular, non-sectarian values.

4. Adapted from actual events, “Ramchand Pakistani” depicts how an accidental crossing of the Pakistan-Indian border at a time of war-like tension (2002) dramatically changes the lives of a poor Pakistani Hindu “untouchable” peasant family comprising a little boy, his father and his mother. The narrative unfolds on two parallel tracks on either side of the border — until they eventually intersect.

This is also a story of a woman’s struggle for emotional security and survival in the face of great adversity — and a child’s coming of age well before time.

5. This is the first full-length feature film for cinema directed by a young Pakistani woman director, Mehreen Jabbar. Her work reflects a deep concern for the individual identity, rights and empowerment of women.

6. While the film is indigenous to Pakistan, it also represents a rare example of creative and constructive co-operation between Pakistan and India on a non-official level. With the consent of the Government of Pakistan, one of India’s reputed actresses Nandita Das has played a lead role in the film as a Pakistani Hindu woman. One of India’s leading music directors, Debajyoti Mishra, has composed the background music and four background songs, three of which also feature the voice of one of the leading Indian woman singers, Ms Shubha Mudgal.

A widely-acknowledged Indian film editor, Aseem Sinha has also co-edited the film with the Director.
7. The Pakistani cinema has been in steep decline for several years. The decision to produce 'Ramchand Pakistani' brought with it more than the normal risks that any film project faces. The financing of the film had to be mobilized in an unconventional manner. While the Producer and his wife Mrs. Shabnam Jabbar have invested a substantial sum, 20 other citizens of Pakistan and of the USA who have never previously invested in a film for cinema, agreed to invest varying amounts to enable the production of the film.

8. While dealing with the impact of political, and possible military conflict between Pakistan and India on the lives of ordinary human beings living in a remote area, the film presents the story in a narrative, character-based drama, and not in polemical, explicitly political terms.

9. Despite the depiction of a Pakistani child held as a prisoner for several years, with adult prisoners in an Indian jail, the basic theme of the film promotes values of friendship and respect for identities of self, religion and nation, avoiding a narrow, chauvinistic approach.

MEHREEN JABBAR - Director

Mehreen worked in advertising in Pakistan for a couple of years before receiving a certificate from UCLA (University of California, Los Angeles) in 1993 in Film, Television and Video. She returned to Pakistan to direct and produce made-for-TV movies and drama series/serials under the banner of TasVeer Productions, almost all of which were critically acclaimed by the Pakistani press.

She went on to direct short TV films and TV series for numerous TV channels in Pakistan, in addition to a number of short films, which have aired in festivals worldwide. Her award-winning films include 'Daughters of the Late Colonel', and a four-part television show: 'Sanam Gazida, Afsoon Khawab, Deeda-e-Purkhoon, and Lal Baig.' 'Ramchand Pakistani' is her first feature length film.

Mehreen has been a member of the National Board of Film Censors in Karachi, a founding member of WAR (War Against Rape), the KaraFilm Festival (Pakistan’s only international film festival) in Karachi, and has also served as a juror at the Leeds International Film Festival in 2002. She currently resides in New York City.

JAVED JABBAR – Writer and Producer

Diverse interests include extensive association with mass media in creative and in public policy dimensions. He wrote, produced and directed Pakistan’s first full-length cinema film in English: "Beyond the Last Mountain" (1976). Also wrote and directed several documentary films including the international award-winning film on the Indus Valley civilization: "Moen-jo-Daro: the city that must not die" (1973 for Pakistan Television Network) as well as hundreds of trend-setting, prize-winning advertising commercials in Pakistan in the 1970s and 1980s.

Drafted progressive media laws for Pakistan as Minister in 3 Cabinets and as a Senator between 1985 and 2000. 10 books (9 in English, 1 in Urdu) comprising writings on film, media, culture, national and international affairs have been published. One of the four elected (for 2005-2008) global Vice Presidents of IUCN-International Union for the Conservation of Nature, the world’s largest environment organization.
MOHAMMAD AHMED - Screenplay

Mohammed Ahmed is amongst the most recognized scriptwriters in Pakistan. His focus has largely been on women's issues, which he has portrayed in genres ranging from intense drama to light comedy. He has written several serials, series, TV films and stage plays, and recently wrote his first feature film for theatrical release, Mehreen Jabbar's 'Ramchand Pakistani'. Ahmed also has a passion for theatre, dance and acting, and has studied Bharat Natyam from Sheema Kirmani (one of Pakistan’s premier classical dancers) and has acted in several stage and television plays. He is currently the head of AAJ TV's Script Department, and in his spare time he's writing films.

SOFIAN KHAN - Cinematographer

Founder of the New York City-based production house Capital K Pictures, Sofian has been producing and directing music videos and commercials for two years. This year marks his transition into feature filmmaking with the completion of 'Ramchand Pakistani' as director of photography, and with his directorial debut "Destined to be Ingested". He is currently at work writing and raising funds for a feature set in Pakistan.

DEBAJYOTI MISHRA - Composer

Debu is a composer and musician from Kolkata, India with a distinct international edge. His musical orientation has been fashioned by diverse influences including western and eastern classical music, folk and post-modern music; thus blessing his creation with a symphonic dynamism. Mishra is steeped in experimentation but without compromising with aesthetics. His stints as the principle violinist, playing for the maestro Satyajit Ray, deserves special mention. Mishra's tunes have crossed local boundaries to acquire a global recognition; his creative associations have been with internationally acclaimed award-winning directors like Govind Nihalni, Mrinal Sen, Rituparno Ghosh, Bhavna Talwar, Academy Award winner Florian Gallenberger and more. His melodies in films like Chokher Bali, Raincoat, Dharam, Hazar Chaurasi Ki Maa, Amar Bhubon and Shadows of Time have fetched immense appreciation and applaud in international film festivals like Berlin, Cannes, India. London, Venice, Munich and Carlos Viveri.'
MARIAM MUKATY – Associate Producer

Mariam Mukaty had for long wanted to be a psychologist, and all was going well until she took a short break from her studies and took up a job with a television channel six years ago. Since then she has worked on a range of programmes and commercials for television including serials, films for television, game shows and political satire. Mariam worked on Michael Winterbottom's "A Mighty Heart" as Assistant Pakistan Production Manager, coordinating pre-production and production in the country. "Ramchand Pakistani" is Mariam's second film.

SONIA REHMAN QURESHI – Creative Consultant

Sonia began her acting career in 2001 with her first television film in the series, 'Gaaney Afsaney'. She was nominated for the Best Actress award in the Lux Style Awards for her lead role in ‘Ambulance’, a tele-series in 2004, and again for her role in the TV serial, ‘Pehchaan’ directed by Mehreen Jabbar in 2007. In total she has worked in 13 TV serials and 14 tele-films. She has also won the award for Best TV Anchor for her morning show on the channel TV One, a satellite channel in South Asia. She attended the New York Film Academy in New York and did a course in direction after which she joined the team of ‘Ramchand Pakistani’. Sonia is currently acting in a TV serial, ‘Dorahaa’, also directed by Mehreen Jabbar.

ASEEM SINHA – Editor

Aseem is a veteran editor from India and has worked with eminent directors like Shyam Benegal and Ketan Mehta. He has edited highly acclaimed and award winning films like ‘Zubeida’, ‘Mammo’ and ‘Sardari Begum’ as well as a number of TV serials and documentaries. Aseem has also worked as an assistant director on many of Shyam Benegal’s films and directed a film for Mukta Arts called “25 years of Subhash Gai in Indian Cinema’. He is currently working on his own documentary set in the Rajasthan region of India.
